

LATEST GERMAN NOTE REFUSES TO ADMIT AMERICAN RIGHT TO PROTECTION WHILE ON SHIP OF ENEMY

Text Of Germany's Latest Reply To President Wilson

BERLIN, July 8.—"The undersigned has the honor to make the following reply to his excellency, ambassador Gerard, to the note of the 1th ultimo, re the impairment of American interests by the German submarine war. The imperial German government learned with satisfaction from the note how earnestly the government of the United States is concerned in seeing the principles of humanity realized in the present war. Also this appeal finds ready echo in Germany and the imperial government is quite willing to permit its statements and decisions on the present case to be governed by the principles of humanity just as it has done always.

Governed By Maritime Law
"The imperial government welcomed with gratitude when the American government, in the note of May 15 itself, recalled that Germany had always permitted itself to be governed by the principles of progress and humanity in dealing with the law of maritime war. Since the time when Frederick the Great negotiated with John Adams, Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson the treaty of friendship and commerce of September 3, 1783, between Prussia and the republic of the west, German and American statesmen have, in fact, always stood together in the struggle for the freedom of the seas and for the protection of peaceful trade.

Advocated by Two Nations
"In the international proceedings which have been conducted for the regulation of the laws of maritime war Germany and America have jointly advocated progressive principles, especially the abolishment of the right of capture at sea and the protection of the interests of neutrals.

Even at the beginning of the present war the German government immediately declared its willingness in response to proposals of the American government, to ratify the declaration of London and thereby subject itself in the use of its naval forces to all the restrictions provided therein, in favor of neutrals. Germany likewise has been always tenacious of the principle that war should be conducted against the armed and organized forces of an enemy country, but that the enemy civilian population must be spared as far as possible from the measures of war.

For Freedom of Seas
The imperial government cherishes the definite hope that some way will be found, when peace is con-

WHERE IS THE LOST ALLEY WITHIN BLOCK OF CITY BUILDING?

LOST—Somewhere within a block of the city hall one alley. Discoverer please notify city engineer for reward.

Somewhere between Fourth and Sixth streets, from Vine to Pine streets, there is an alley. It is on the original plat of the city of La Crosse and all the maps show it. So there can be no question that it is there. But the city, which a year ago through the council ordered that alley opened to traffic, can't find it.

City Engineer George Bradish last night admitted to the council, when questioned by Alderman B. C. Smith, that he couldn't find the alley. To locate it, he said, it was necessary to find the section line which forms its western boundary. And the corner-post of the section can't be found. Neither can any other marks which old descriptions declare exist.

If the council had ordered the repair of North Fourth street this year, the city engineer said, he had entertained hopes that buried in the macadam of that highway he would find certain stakes which would give him a clue to the whereabouts of the alley. But that hope has vanished. Fourth street is not to be repaired, and Mr. Bradish does not know just where the stakes are. He does not think it advisable to dig up all of the street looking for them.

The Alley is Fenced
In the meantime, the council was informed, C. L. V. Craft has fenced off the land which the city is morally sure should be included in its alley. Only it can't be proved. Martin Haley, owner of the abutting property, wants the alley opened. Mr. Bradish would be glad to oblige, but he can't find the alley.

Alderman Smith attempted to be helpful. He suggested that the corner of Sixth and Vine streets be located, the frontage of the Craft property from the corner laid off, and the remaining territory regarded as the mouth of the alley. But even this faint ray of hope failed. There is an "excess in the measurements," the city engineer told Mr. Smith, and the suggested plan would not definitely locate the alley—not within a foot or so.

"Well, it looks mighty funny to me that we can't find the alley," concluded Mr. Smith. "If the city engineer can't find it we ought to get some one to do it for him." "I wish you would," sighed Mr. Bradish.

BERLIN PRESS IS AS ONE IN SUPPORT OF GERMAN REPLY

Opinion Is Carried That This Country Will Accede to German Views

BY CARL W. ACKERMAN
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

BERLIN, via, The Hague, July 10.—The Berlin press today was practically unanimous in supporting the stand taken by the imperial government in the second reply regarding the Lusitania. Most of the papers carried long editorials on the note. Captain Persius, the Tageblatt's critic, took the view that Germany had met America's demands and that the German reply will end the controversy.

"The new note states the course to be followed, under the greatest care for the protection of North American interests," said the Tageblatt's writer.
The Morning Post admits that the German reply does not eliminate the controversy arising over America's demand that the rights of the American ships passing through the war zone must not be abridged,

A LETTER TO THE PUBLIC FROM A COMMITTEE OF FIFTEEN BABIES

Blckshes suggskl (meaning "Dear Editor").—

I am a baby.

I live in a little house in Hungry Point. It is hot in summer and cold in winter. My mother is away from home all day, washing for people.

I used to have to stay in the little house, alone, while my mother was away at her work, but this year I have been staying all day in the Baby Colony in Myrick park. There are fifteen of us babies there, in all. There are a head nurse and other nurses, all nice girls, who take care of us, and if we are sick a red-headed doctor comes and tells the nurses what to do. He always laughs, and chuckles us under the chin. The nurses laugh, too, and play with us. And outside the tent the birds sing and the squirrels play. They like it there, too, where the air is fresh and the grass is green and where there are great, shady trees and bright sunshine.

But now I am afraid I shall have to give up the park and stay all day in the little house again. Until yesterday Dr. Gunderson has sent his big automobile to take us to the Baby Colony in the morning, and back home again at night. But now Dr. Gunderson has other use for his car, and unless some other kind person will send an automobile to carry us we can't go to Myrick park any more.

I know there are lots of people in La Crosse who have cars who would be glad to take us to the park, but the trouble is, they don't think of it. Or else they think so many want to do it that it would not do any good to volunteer. Every day I see strong young men and pretty girls gliding by in great touring cars. They seem to be just riding. They have kind faces, and I am sure they have kind hearts. If they only knew how interesting we Colony babies are, and how grateful we would be, I am sure they couldn't think of leaving us to swelter in the lonesome little houses when the great park was holding out its oak arms to welcome us. They'd pick us up on their morning spin and set us down out there where there is baby health and happiness for us.

Our names are Mabel, Maud, Johnny, Rollie, Mary, Evelyn, Jimmy, Daisy, Tommy, Emma, Selma, Freddy, Christine, Bobby and Rose. I am Rose. I wonder if a big automobile will come to the little houses tomorrow to take us to the Baby Colony.

Sibblb Sikkboaki (Meaning "Yours truly"),

BABY ROSE.

SOLDIER BREAKS NECK IN DIVE AT CITY BATH HOUSE

Alonzo Williamson at Point of Death with Shattered Cervical Vertebra

DIVED INTO KNEE-DEEP WATER Plunged Head First Off the Steps of Bath House and Is Taken to Hospital

Alonzo Williamson, 23, an artilleryman from the Third Field Artillery now in camp at Sparta, is in the St. Francis hospital at the point of death with a broken cervical vertebra, the result of a dive into shallow water from the steps of the city bath house yesterday afternoon.

Williamson was hurt in full view of scores of bathers. He had just left the dressing room when he ran down the steps and plunged head-first into the water, which was scarcely knee-deep. He came to the surface and clung to the steps, so apparently in pain that other bathers came to his aid and carried him to the bath house veranda.

He complained of pain in the neck, and an ambulance was called. At the hospital it was said that he had broken one of the bones in his neck. His condition grew steadily worse.

His regimental officers at Camp Robinson were notified of his accident. The Third artillery went into camp about a week ago. It came here from San Antonio, Texas.

At 3:30 this afternoon the hospital reported Williamson was apparently rallying. Total numbness which had gripped his body from the neck down was disappearing a little, it was stated.

BIG HAUL MADE IN YELLOWSTONE

LIVINGSTON, Mont., July 10.—With many hours' start of the pursuing troops, the three bandits who held up three of a string of twelve stages in Yellowstone National park are believed to have made good their escape today with about $4,000 booty. The scene of the hold-up was ideal for the bandits' purpose, a narrow winding road flanked by dense woods, and the path of their escape led them into some of the wildest country embraced in the park. Two suspects were gathered in.

DANGER WARNING WILL TAKE PLACE OF BRIDGE REPAIR

Council Allows Contractor to Withdraw Bid on the Threat of Injunction by Mahoney

WILL WARN PASSERS BY SIGNS Nineteenth Ward Alderman Announces He Will Not Let City Spend Cash in Minnesota

The city of La Crosse will not fill in the West Channel bridge, despite the admission that it is unsafe for travel and may at any time be the cause of a fatal accident. Instead, a warning sign will be posted disclaiming responsibility for any accidents to passers.

Act on Mahoney's Warning
This is the situation following a meeting of the common council last night when the Western Construction company asked for and received permission to withdraw their bid and bond of $450 for filling in the bridge. The company declared its action was necessary in view of "a certain alderman's" warning that any contractor who performed this work on the city's property in Minnesota would do so at the risk of an injunction re-

This Will Be Decent Place
Carl Kissebach, proprietor of the saloon property at 218 North Front street, where a license was refused to Jack Riley, promised to board up the winery and use it for a kitchen, allow no women in the place and run it in strict accordance with decency and the laws of the state if granted a license, in a communication read by Alderman C. F. Storandt. His application was taken under advisement by the liquor license committee.

The council was divided about allowing the bid to be withdrawn, Alderman Schneeberger and Alderman (Continued on Page 6, col. 5).

CHICAGO STRIKE SETTLED VICTORY GOING TO LABOR

Carpenters Granted Raise After Two Months Lay-off; End Precipitated by Closing of Yards

QUARTER MILLION AFFECTED Strike Was One of Bitterest Labor Fights in the History of Chicago

CHICAGO, July 10.—The carpenters' strike, on since May 1 and which has resulted in economic and actual loss of millions, was settled just before dawn today. The settlement was a victory for the men. They were granted an increase to seventy cents an hour under a uniform agreement to continue in force three years.

The settlement, not wholly unexpected, ended one of the bitterest labor wars in Chicago's history, despite its comparative brevity. The situation was brought to a crisis about ten days ago when nearly 200 of Chicago's great lumber yards and factories where all kinds of building materials were made, ordered a suspension of deliveries. Nearly a quarter of a million bread winners were affected.

The strike was marked by sporadic outbreaks of violence. Both sides made charges of law violations and systematized strong arm work.

It was estimated today that the contractors lost in interest on capital tied up during the nine and one-half weeks a total of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000. During this period the carpenters were assessed $360,000. The loss in wages was heavy.

BOMBS PLANTED ON BRITISH SHIP

NEW YORK, July 10.—Nine bombs, hidden in bags of sugar were found aboard the British steamer Kirkoswald, when she discharged her cargo at Marseilles, France, on her last eastward trip, according to officers who landed here today on the vessel's return trip.

The sugar was loaded on the vessel at the Fabre line pier in Brooklyn, they said. They believe the stevedores hid the bombs, which for some reason failed to explode.

OFFICIALS EXPECT NOTE TO BE HELD NOT SATISFACTORY

Private Belief Is That the Situation Is Fraught with Grave Possibilities

EXPECT REITERATION OF DEMANDS

Question Is Raised Whether or Not Wilson Sees Unfruitfulness of Negotiations

BY JOHN EDWIN NEVIN
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Officials did not try today to conceal their opinion that Germany's reply to President Wilson's second Lusitania note is entirely unsatisfactory.

This was not, however, the opinion they expressed officially. Officially they said practically nothing at all. In the president's absence they obviously were afraid to talk. The situation, they plainly considered, is fraught with dangerous possibilities. They preferred to leave them for the president to handle.

The consensus of opinion of opinion seemed to be that the chief executive's rejoinder would be a reiteration of his previous demands. The question also was raised, however, whether he would not consider that negotiations were getting nowhere and that the time had come for something besides an exchange of notes—for instance, for a break in diplomatic relations between the two governments.

The best posted officials speaking unofficially and anonymously did not appear to think so. They could only guess, of course. Nobody pretended to know what the president would do. Yet it was evident that they not only thought he would reply, but they also doubted if his reply would take a form which could be construed as an ultimatum to Berlin.

They did think, however, that he would insist on all his original contentions. Comment on the German communication was all to the effect that, while the kaiser makes counter proposals to the United States, they amount to no concession at all since they maintain that Americans will be safe on American and on other neutral ships, and plainly imply that they will be safe on no others.

AGAIN JUSTIFIES TORPEDOING OF THE LUSITANIA

Offers to Guarantee Safe Passage to Neutral Ships or Four Enemy Vessels

MUST NOT CARRY CONTRABAND

Note States That Germany Expects U. S. to See to It That Cargoes Are Not Illegal

REPEATS ACCUSATION OF FOE

Charge Made Again That Submarine Warfare Was Forced on Kaiser by Enemies

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Germany refuses to accept President Wilson's contention that Americans have the right to travel in the "war zone" with confidence that their lives are unconditionally sacred. This was the interpretation placed today on the latest German reply. Instead of the assurance asked by the president that American lives will be safeguarded on the high seas, the German note enunciates a new principle—that protection which neutrals can expect extends only to neutral ships, or enemy vessels not carrying contraband of war.

The German position is substantially this:

1. American ships engaged in legitimate trade will not be interfered with nor the lives of Americans upon neutral ships be endangered.

2. That German submarines will be instructed to allow American passenger ships to pass freely and safely. Germany entertaining in return the confident hope that the American government will see that these ships do not carry contraband; such ships to be provided with distinguishing marks and their arrival announced a reasonable time in advance. The same privilege is extended to a reasonable number of neutral passenger ships under the American flag, and should the number of ships thus available for passenger service prove inadequate, Germany is willing to permit America to place four hostile passenger steamers under the American flag to ply between North America and Europe under the same conditions.

The German note repeats the attempted justification of the sinking of the Lusitania, repeating the assertion that had the German submarine captain given the crew and passengers of the liner a chance to escape he would have invited the "sure destruction" of his vessel. It is again averred that the Lusitania carried a large cargo of war munitions.

The justification of the sinking of the Lusitania was keenly felt, inasmuch as President Wilson made the fate of the Americans on that particular vessel the chief text of his last two communications.

Throughout the entire note, critics said, Germany returns to the first principles of warfare.

Affirming an original desire to fight according to accepted rules, Germany insists her rivals have forced her into a fight for very existence, and calmly states, it was pointed out, that she is meeting that front with every weapon at her command, and, her submarines being effective, she has no intention of curtailing their use, although she is willing to do everything possible to avoid jeopardizing Americans' lives.

Attention was called also to the fact that, while American shipping is declared immune from molestation, in this connection Germany enunciates a new principle which is entirely hostile to the American position, taken by President Wilson that American citizens may go where they please on the high seas.

"In particular, the imperial government is unable to admit that American citizens can protect an enemy's ship through the mere fact of their presence on board," says Germany.

President's Claims Denied.

This was declared to be a direct denial of the president's claims. Next came the German promise to allow American ships unmolested passage through the submarine zone. Similar privileges, said the note, will be extended to neutral ships and, if these are not enough, Germany offers to permit four enemy ships, carrying the American flag, to operate unmolested.

Hildreth-Chesley was all agog over the charms, the wealth, the clothes of a newcomer, Mrs. Ruel Latran, who had taken the Farms under rather a long lease—Green Farms, to be exact, the show place of the colony. Whoever lived in it must have money, also social sponsors; also, beyond all, personality.

You see, Olney, who owned the Farms although tired of the place, yet held it in a certain petulant regard, which made him exacting as to possible tenants. He had let it stand empty save for caretakers and sundry of his employees in the vacation period for full two years, losing thereby in taxes, interest and repairs a very pretty penny.

The which is illuminating—both as to owner and new tenant. Olney had never seen her, but what he had heard from a mutual acquaintance so prepossessed him in her favor that his inquiries had not gone beyond her bank account.

She had taken possession all but covertly—with the noiseless, unhurried ease possible only to wealth, combined with knowledge. Notwithstanding, she did not in the least affect the pose of grande dame. Contrariwise, she herself conducted business with the tradesfolk, selecting the shops that were most inviting, asking with a charming smile to be served with the best—she really must depend upon the wisdom of the sellers—asking also a strict rendering of weekly accounts, adding, generously, that in case of rush orders the trouble they made should be considered in the bills.

Also, she asked modestly in regard to a pew—if St. Asaph's rented sittings, please give her the best available. No, she might not occupy it always—perhaps not even often—but she wanted her place there of right, not of courtesy. Of course, when it was vacant she would be glad to have the sexton fill it with casuals. She went even further on finding plenty of pews vacant—took three, each for two years, and made treaty with the deaconess to let sundry poor gentlewomen know they were free of them.

Add to this that for all her Paris things, her frocks and frills, proclaiming the exclusive avenue shops, she found occasion to buy from the local milliner, the straggling and struggling local dry goods store, and you will see that Hildreth-Chesley had reason to rejoice in its new inhabitant even more than it gossiped about her.

The colony, of course, swarmed in welcome to her. That she was distinctly new was all in her favor. A vague haze of romance enshrouded her past. Some said her millions were mine bred. Others hinted she had acquired them by the parlor paths of divorce. Still others made her one of the rarely lucky one who, choosing to be old men's darlings, are rewarded by swift widowhood. Whatever the fact, she was surely not unconsolated any more than she was indecorously gay. Her manners, indeed, had just the touch of half-mourning that made her clothes so wonderful.

No armor is so impenetrable as a casual frankness that scouts the name of secrets. Mrs. Latran was amazingly frank—even about her age. Twenty-nine she gave herself out to be, sighing that it was so near to thirty and waving away consoling speech that she hardly looked twenty-five. Further, she spoke of her college, of her native country, touching very lightly on the fact that she was the last of her race. Oddly, she did not think ever to mention the family name, but there was no tripping her, even if anybody had tried it, over country sights and sounds, and habits of mind.

It was even odder—women took to her amazingly. Not that she kowtowed to them or put herself out to fascinate them. Unconsciously they sensed in her a detachment, a lack of potential rivalry. Which is another way of saying that she let severely alone all their masculine appanages, present or prospective. This in spite of being graciously charming to every mother's son of them. As Teeny Ware put it, she was the best sort of good fellow.

Olney, who came down in August, laughed over the saying. His coming was a surprise. Of course, he did not go to the Farms, but he did meet the mistress of it many times. Also, he studied her intently—a thing he had rarely done for any woman.

Notwithstanding, they got on admirably. She apparently ignored the challenge of his scrutiny and was gay and cordial as with all the rest. So there was really scant warrant for his saying to her at the end of a fortnight, "Madam, whatever the game is henceforth you must count me in."

"Not yet. It would spoil—everything," she answered, and it was amazing what mirth and mockery danced over her eyes and mouth. "I dare not even let my whole self in," she ran on. "The experiment is as gorgeous as a soap bubble—and as easily broken."

"I won't break it," Olney answered, kindly. "Tell me by little. As, for instance, isn't Dan Langton the original first cause of it?"

"You are his best friend?" she parried. Olney nodded, but said quickly: "I come next to you. No—he hasn't said so outright—but when he talked of you the very first time—I knew."

"What did he say of me?" she asked breathlessly. "Oh, nothing much. Just that you were the wonder of the world, and more of that sort. You know it by heart, I'm sure."

"So that's why you let me come here," she said, smiling and nodding. "And I have believed it was all my wonderful man of business. Say! What did he tell you?"

"Nothing—had no chance," Olney answered tranquilly. Then, dropping to a plaintive key: "Please remember I've a weak heart—can't stand this strain of curiosity. Tell me and I'll never tell anybody—but Dan."

"You mean—about the experiment?" she asked.

Olney smiled a "Yes." She went on quickly, as though fearing to lose courage. "The experiment is to see if a book-made woman can hold her own with—the other sort."

"Explains! This is all Sanscrit to me," Olney exploded.

She drew a deep breath and hurried on: "My mother was a cook, my father a day laborer. He died when I was five, and when I was fifteen my mother followed him. Then old Ruel Latran, for whom she had worked all my life, a cripple and blind, married me—to save me—"

"I see," Olney interjected compassionately.

"He was old and rough and ignorant, but the day after he married me Fate flung ten millions in his lap—the mine that had cost him sight and strength suddenly became enormously valuable. Imagine what money meant to the pair of us—we didn't know enough even to spend it. He had made a will giving me everything when he thought he had little. He was fair enough to hold to the bargain after the change came. For seven years I was eyes, hands, feet to him, never stirring from the house except for walks while he slept. I don't know how he got the notion, but he himself proposed correspondence courses to me. Also he let me have books and leisure, getting in a stout nurse so I might have more time."

"When I was twenty-two he had a stroke. Afterward I never left him. You won't credit it, but the two years he lay helpless, speechless, made him very dear to me. Still, I kept up the reading. I knew it pleased him. His face would brighten a little if I held a new book to his cheek. Almost his last words before the stroke were: 'Make yourself a lady so you'll do credit to the money.' I did my best—am doing it still."

"After I was free there was a period of travel. In course of it I met Dan. You know what he is—how high strung, how almost finicky—yet in a week he was begging me to marry him. I would have done it gladly only for one thing—I loved him just as crazily, just as unreasonably as he loved me. I couldn't take the chance of making him ashamed of me—that is to say, of making him hate me. So I've come here among his own sort to try myself out. Tell me—what chance have I of winning?"

"No chance about it—it's a dead moral certainty!" Olney declared brusquely, getting up and shaking both her hands. Over his shoulder he added: "I'm going to call up Dan. Be ready to see us around 12 tomorrow. He's always said I should be his best man."

GERMAN ADVANCE ON LUBLIN HALTED CLAIMS PETROGRAD

Mackenzien Driven Back on Wide Front and Successes Are Reported Near Warsaw

PETROGRAD, July 10.—The grand duke's armies not only have halted the Austro-German advance on Lublin but have taken the offensive and are driving Mackenzien back on a wide front extending from the mouth of the river Podlip to south of Bykhawa, the war office announced today.

"In the fighting around the village of Wilkoczorn alone, we have taken 15,000 prisoners," it was announced. "The enemy continues to retreat, resisting obstinately the pressure of our advance guards."

"The enemy attacked fruitlessly our positions at the village of Koup-tche, on the Bug river, leaving 500 dead and wounded before our trenches. Elsewhere along the Bug and along the Zlota Lipa river, our patrols reconnoitering along this front have changed hands in Galicia, the enemy has ceased its attacks."

The official dispatches today have brought word of fighting on several fronts in Poland west and north of Warsaw.

"Below the fortress of Ossowetz," said the official statement, the Germans attempted to bridge the Bobr river. Our artillery destroyed the enemy pontoons and forced the Germans to withdraw. In the direction of Bolimow, particularly near the village of Goumine, enemy's attacks failed for the entire front. At Pisa valley we captured a German aeroplane."

Story—The Bunny Rabbit Whose Name Was Jack.

He Reached Down and Drew Out the Rest of Jack.

"I KNOW a funny story about a bunny rabbit whose name was Jack," said daddy. "That is, that was his name at first."

"The children's daddy brought Jack home to them in his coat pocket one day. "The children saw Jack's ears sticking out of their daddy's pocket, and he reached down and drew out the rest of Jack right by the ears, and there in daddy's hand, swinging back and forth by the ears, was the cunningest, furriest, plumpest little white rabbit you ever saw. His little nose went twitchy-twitchy, and his pink eyes were very round, and he just swung back and forth in daddy's hand, and he didn't mind being held by the ears at all, for, you see, children, if I held you by the ears, how you would howl, but bunny rabbits are different."

"What shall we name the rabbit?" asked the children's daddy. And Clara, who was the oldest, spoke up and said, "Let's call him Jack." And their daddy laughed and said that would be a good name for the rabbit, he thought.

"So Jack became a member of that household, and he was a real pet, I assure you. The children used to have a great deal of fun with him. They liked to hold him up by his pink ears, which were so transparent that the sunlight would shine right through them when one of the kiddies held him up, and he would blink and kick sleepily with his white legs."

"He liked to hop around on the lawn and in the garden when they didn't catch him at it and lug him right out of there by the ears, for he used to like to dig away the earth with his funny paws and eat the little green growing things, and as rabbits don't know a great deal it did no good at all to scold him and tell him to stay out of there."

"So the summer months rolled by, and the children continued to have fun with that rabbit. But somehow their daddy would always laugh when they called the rabbit by his name, and they couldn't imagine what amused him."

"But one day they found out when their daddy said to them, 'Children, I guess you'll have to change that rabbit's name.' And they couldn't imagine what he meant till he brought them to where Jack slept in the barn."

"And there was Jack with three of the cutest little baby rabbits you ever saw, for, you see, Jack was not a Mr. Rabbit at all; he was a Mrs. Rabbit."

"And then the children just capered with delight to see those little baby rabbits, and they changed Jack's name to Mrs. Jane."

A VICTORY FOR DEMOCRACY

The defeat of the central board of education bill is the most important event in the present state administration. It has thwarted the adoption of a policy that would have restricted progress and dammed the source of Wisconsin democracy. Under color of doing something for the common schools which it made no provision for doing, it aimed a blow straight at the heart of truth and liberty as embodied in free institutions of research and learning.

The Staudenmayer bill, passed as a substitute, embodied the one tenable feature of the Von Gordon bill.
If, as he says, the governor shall veto
it, the schools may lose the advantage of a plan which, properly administered, might have been of some service, but it is not vital because it established no authority to compel better country teaching through the employment of better teachers.

The meat of the central board plan was not outstandingly apparent.
It was admitted that the university and normal schools had been built up to distinction by boards of regents.
How the abolition of these boards would help the country schools is an unsolved enigma. If the regencies were good for the higher schools, why abolish them? If the regencies were good for the higher schools, why not some such independent method for the common schools?

It is difficult to credit the Van Gordon program with good faith. It is not so difficult to find a motive. Under the influence of a free university progressive government had come to Wisconsin. Academic freedom in other states had followed, spreading liberal democracy over the nation.

During a temporary reaction conservatives had made gains in several states. It is easy to presume that the conservatives realize that to hold this advantage will be impossible unless the fountain of progressive inspiration—truth emancipated from dogma—be checked. Give the universities a free hand with fact and philosophy, and each new commencement would send its ranks to the reinforcement of democracy.

But he who directly attacked the academic freedom of the universities would meet discomfiture. Hence to preach economy, to put up and batter a straw man of socialism, to play the country school against the university, was the political plan which offered the better opportunity.

We do not know that the governor of Wisconsin was personally conscious of this program; we do know that not all of his supporters and leaders were conscious of it. But that the plan existed, emanating from great capitalistic institutions, insinuated by suggestion into the legislative programs and administrative policies of several states, is borne out by the records.

It is this campaign to stanch freedom of learning and entrench dogma that Senator Bosshard and his little band of associates in the state senate have frustrated.

LISTEN TO BABY ROSE

Some people will insist that the baby never wrote the letter. On advice of council the editor declines to testify, but if Baby Rose COULD write, she'd write a letter just like the one that appears on the first page of this number of the TRI-BUNE.

There are in the city of La Crosse about 600 automobiles. Surely in all this number there are ten citizens who will volunteer to run the Baby Jitney for one week between now and October 1. We have no appeal to make. None is necessary. Baby Rose's letter, on the first page, presents the matter clearly. Indeed, for a two-year-old she seems to have done very well—to have given all the essential facts with just the right touch of sentiment.

We know that some of the busy men of the city are going to provide cars for the Baby Colony, but one picture that Baby Rose has drawn in her letter persists upon the vision.
It is that pretty girl who glides by in her automobile. We have seen her. One day she is the fair-haired type, the next she flashes past in sable and olive—always she is the American princess of health and beauty.

It is a great picture—with something lacking. Can you imagine that pretty girl in the great automobile, surrounded by the laughing babies filled with the excitement of a great adventure of speed and luxury? Snapshot her happy party flying up West avenue, or pausing to take in Susan or Jane at the Little House, with the grateful mother smiling in the doorway. Visualize her arrival at the Baby Camp, under the great trees of Myrick Park!

How prophetic of national security! What a vision of the greater democracy! The idea is fit to fill the happiest moments in a young woman's life. Its charm and promise might furnish the inspiration for a masterpiece which would become the foundation for the to-arrive "distinctive American art." The setting and the properties are there, awaiting the artist. Behold the Baby Camp, the nurses, the park with its trees and birds, the babies—

Wanted—the American girl and the auto!

THIS IS GOOD BUSINESS

Excepting only matters of detail, there seems nothing to consider in relation to Mayor Bentley's plea to the council for a system whereby the city shall purchase the brick used in city contracts. The question he raises is automatically answered by the facts. That we have paid more for brick than have other cities is conclusive of the rightness of his position. No matter how, no matter why. No need to prove combinations and conspiracies. No need to speculate upon freezing out of competitors, pre-arranged bids or other disquieting possibilities and explanations. This city expects its contractors to make a fair profit upon their work; it does not expect to pay them, in addition, a profit upon material.

The situation uncovered by the mayor, the proposal in which he is supported by such opposing leaders as Torrance and Mahoney, not only justify city purchase of brick, but add weight to the broader policy of establishing a city purchasing agency.

It is early in the administration of Mayor Bentley. Thus far he has encountered no great test. But he has met such situations as have arisen with sound and businesslike methods. Moreover, he has shown a faculty for initiative that promises more for the future. A man who is not bound by precedent, who holds old ruts in contempt, who finds time for personal investigation and supervision, may be expected to do many things that have long been neglected.

This is The TRIBUNE's first comment upon the administration of Mayor Bentley. We have been "watchfully waiting." Three months have passed since the election. To us they have been good months. We have found some things in which we did not fully agree with His Honor, but none in which he could not logically support his position. He has shown a quick perception and a firm grasp. We believe the chance for a strong administration has come, and while we feel that citizens and officials should never neglect to make known their opinions regarding city matters, we recognize the importance of firmly backing all workable policies and plans adopted by the administration. Therefore, to the end that progressive efficiency may find valuable expression through the services of Mayor Bentley and his fellow workers, we bespeak for them the earnest co-operation of the entire public.

Why Daniel Was Immune
"Can you tell me," the Sunday school teacher asked, "why Daniel, when he was cast into the den with the lions, was unharmed?"
"I can, please," piped a juvenile voice.
"Cause he b'longed to the show."

608 N. 6th St., Springfield, Ill.—"Several months ago I was troubled with pimples
all over my face. The breaking out was unsightly and the burning and itching caused me to scratch which irritated the pimples. They caused me to lose much sleep for they itched all night long. They disfigured me while they lasted. My face was very sore. The pimples then broke out all over my body also. My clothes felt uncomfortable.
"One day I heard about Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used two cakes of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment, and was healed, and not a scar was left."

Quips and Cranks and Wanton Wiles

Poor Freshies!
The president of an eastern university had just announced in chapel that the freshman class was the largest enrolled in the history of the institution. Immediately, he followed the announcement by reading the text for the morning: "Lord, how are they increased that trouble me!"

The Wrong Direction
Owing to a fog, a steamer stopped in the mouth of a river. An old lady inquired of the captain the cause of delay.
"Can't see up the river," replied
the officer.

"But, captain, I can see the stars overhead," she argued.
"Yes," said the captain gruffly,
"but until the boiler busts we ain't a-goin' that way."

Recognized It
Just by way of a change, two sailors, recently returned from a voyage, decided to have dinner together in a fashionable restaurant. They scanned the menu card carefully.
"Let's stow some of this consommy," said the leader of the adventure to the waiter.
"What's the consommy?" asked the other sailor.

"It's a Dago word for soup," his experienced shipmate assured him.
A few minutes later the consomme was served.
"Huh!" sneered the ignorant one.
"We been sailin' on soup all our lives an' didn't know it."

Shipwrecked

On a very rainy day an exceedingly drunken man stood waving back and forth beneath a waterspout. A passing policeman took him by the arm, thinking to lead him away, but the drunken man resisted weakly,
and mumbled:
"Shave (hic) the—(hic) wimmen and (hic) children! I (hic) can swim!"

Red Tape With a Vengeance

The widow of a German officer presented herself at the office for the purpose of drawing the pension due to her. She handed in the necessary certificate from the mayor of the town in which she lived, to the effect that she was still alive.

"This certificate is not correct,"
said the officer in charge.
"What's the matter with it?" asked the lady.

"It bears the date October 21," was the stern rejoinder, "and your pension was due on October 15."

"Well, what kind of a certificate do you want?"
"We want a certificate stating that you were alive on October 15," said
the official, with great formality.

"If my brother Allan himself were in the house," he said, "he would have to admit that it is our father speaking in that letter."

A rustle of interest ran through the auditorium. The few who had recognized Harrowby turned to stare at him now. For a moment he sat silent, his face a variety of colors in the dim light. Then with a cry of rage he leaped to his feet.

"You stole that letter, you cur," he said. "You are a liar, a fraud, an imposter."

The man on the stage stood shading his eyes with his hand.

"Ah, Allan," he answered, "so you are here, after all? Is that quite the proper greeting—after all these years?"

A roar of sympathetic applause greeted this sally. There was no doubt as to whose side Mr. Trim-mer's friend, the public, was on.
Harrowby stood in his place, his lips twitching, his eyes for once blazing and angry.

Dick Minot was by this time escorting Miss Meyrick up the aisle, and they came quickly to the cool street. Harrowby, Paddock and Spencer Meyrick followed immediately. His lordship was most contrite.

"A thousand pardons," he pleaded. "Really I can't tell you how sorry I am, Cynthia. To have made you conspicuous—what was I thinking of? But he maddened me—I—"
"Don't worry, Allan," said Miss Meyrick gently. "I like you the better for being maddened."

Old Spencer Meyrick said nothing, but Minot noted that his face was rather red, and his eyes were somewhat dangerous. They all walked back to the hotel in silence.

From the hotel lobby, as if by pre-arrangement, Harrowby followed Miss Meyrick and her father into a parlor. Minot and Paddock were left alone.

"My word, old top," said Mr.
Paddock facetiously, "a rough night for the nobility. What do you think?
That lad's story sounded like a little bit of all right to me. Eh, what?"

"It did sound convincing," returned the troubled Minot. "But then—a servant at Rakedale Hall could have concocted it."

"Mayhap," said Mr. Paddock.
"However, old Spencer Meyrick looked to me like a volcano I'd want to get out from under. Poor old Harrowby! I'm afraid there's a rift within the loot—nay, no loot at all."

"Jack," said Minot firmly, "that wedding has got to take place."
"Why, what's it to you?"

"It happens to be everything. But keep it under your hat."

"Great Scott—does Harrowby owe you money?"

"I can't explain just at present, Jack."

"Oh, very well," replied Mr. Paddock. "But take it from me, old man—she's a million times too good for him."

"A million," laughed Mr. Minot bitterly. "You underestimate."

Paddock stood staring with wonder at his friend.
"You slip in riddles, my boy," he said.

"Do I?" returned Minot. "Maybe some day I'll make it all clear."

He parted from Paddock and ascended to the third floor. As he wandered through the dark passage-way in search of his room, he bumped suddenly into a heavy man, walking softly. Something about the contour of the man in the dark gave him a suggestion.

"Good evening, Mr. Wall," he said.
The scurry of hurrying footsteps, but no answer. Minot went on to 389, and placed his key in the lock.
It would not turn. He twisted the knob of the door—it was unlocked.
He stepped inside and flashed on the light.

His small abode was in a mad disorder. The chiffonier drawers had been emptied on the floor, the bed was torn to pieces, the rug thrown in a corner. Minot smiled to himself.

Some one had been searching—searching for Chain Lightning's Collar. Who? Who but the man he had

CHAPTER IX.

"Wanted: Board and Room."

As Dick Minot bent over to pick up his scattered property, a knock sounded on the half-open door, and Lord Harrowby dropped in. The nobleman was gloom personified. He threw himself despondently down on the bed.

"Minot, old chap," he drawled,
"it's all over." His eyes took in the wreckage. "Eh? What the deuce have you been doing, old boy?"

"I haven't been doing anything," Minot answered. "But others have been busy. While we were at the—er—theater, fond fingers have been searching for Chain Lightning's Collar."

"The devil! You haven't lost it?"
"No—not yet, I believe." Minot took the envelope from his pocket and drew out the gleaming necklace.

"Ah, it's still safe—"
Harrowby leaped from the bed and slammed shut the door.
"Dear old boy," he cried, "keep the accursed thing in your pocket.
No one must see it. I say, who's been searching here? Do you think it could have been O'Malley?"

"What is O'Malley's interest in your necklace?"

"Some other time, please. Sorry to inconvenience you with the thing.
Do hang on to it, won't you? Awful mix-up if you didn't. Bad mix-up as it is. As I said when I came in, it's all over."

"What's all over?"

"Everything. The marriage—my chance for happiness, Minot. I'm a most unlucky chap. Meyrick has just postponed the wedding in a frightful loud tone of voice."

"Postponed it?" Sad news for Jephson this, yet as he spoke Mr.
Minot felt a thrill of joy in his heart. He smiled the pleasantest smile he had so far shown San Marco.

"Exactly. He was fearfully rattled, was Meyrick. My word, how he did go on. Considers his daughter humiliated by the antics of that creature we saw on the stage tonight. Can't say I blame him, either. The wedding is indefinitely postponed, unless that imposter is removed from the scene immediately."

"Oh—unless," said Minot. His heart sank. His smile vanished.

"Unless was the word, I fancy,"
said Harrowby, blinking wisely.

"Lord Harrowby," Minot began,
"you intimated the other day that this man might really be your brother—"

"No," Harrowby broke in. "Impossible. I got a good look at the chap tonight. He's no more a Harrowby than you are."

"You give me your word for that?"

"Absolutely. Even after twenty years of America no Harrowby would drag his father's name on to the vaudeville stage. No, he is an impostor, and as such he deserves no consideration whatever. And by the by, Minot—you will note that the postponement is through no fault of mine."

Minot made a wry face.

"I have noted it," he said. "In other words, I go on to the stage now—following the man who followed the trained seals. I thought my role was that of Cupid, but it begins to look more like Captain Kidd. Ah, well—I'll do my best." He stood up.
"I'm going out into the soft moonlight for a little while, Lord Harrow-
by. While I'm gone you might call Spencer Meyrick up and ask him to do nothing definite in the way of postponement until he hears from me—us—er—you."

CHILDREN'S FETE FEATURES END OF WISCONSIN WEEK

Several Hundred People
Watch Forty Youngsters
Dance and Play Games
in Copeland Park

DR. WIRT IS FINAL SPEAKER

Afternoon Is Story of Arctic and in Evening He Tells of War
Horrors

An open-air children's fete, the first of its kind ever held in Copeland park, or in the city in connection with a chautauqua, delighted several hundred adult onlookers as the crowning feature of Wisconsin Week yesterday afternoon. Some forty boys and girls danced and sang in the entertainment.

The games and exercises which Miss Mildred Dyer, play director with the chautauqua, had taught them during the preceding days of the week, furnished the program, strung together loosely in a visual reproduction of a day's activity in the life of a child. The first city playground athletic meet followed the fete.

Last night closed the chautauqua with the address of Lincoln C. Wirt, Arctic explorer and war correspondent, and a second concert by the Tuskegee institute octette of negro singers. Mr. Wirt also spoke in the afternoon.

The afternoon address was devoted to personal reminiscences of the speaker's life in the Arctic.

It was a romantic tale of personal adventure rather than a lecture, a story of which the hero was an Alaskan wolf-dog, "Whiskers," loyal leader of the sledge-pack. Abounding with adventure, with pathos and flashes of humor, the story was one that thrilled his hearers as Dr. Wirt told of his lonely dash across 1200 miles of frozen wilderness in search of help for a fever-beset mining camp within the Arctic circle.

But even in the forefront of the story was "Whiskers," servant and guardian, companion and friend of the lonely white man travelling southward in search of the open sea over country never before trod by the foot of one of his race. It was "Whiskers" who led the attack when the wolves closed around the night camp, "Whiskers" who awoke him when he was slipping into the open air hole in the ice in his sleep, "Whiskers" who revived the waning courage of the pack to a last effort when it had given up with the peaks of the Aleutian mountains and the goal almost in sight.

Then it was "Whiskers," faithful to the last, when his master set forth from the shore village in the face of raging water of Shelikof straits, in an Alaskan kayak to the island where boats land, who plunged into the sea and swam after him.

There was more than one moist eye in the auditorium as the speaker told of the heartrending cries of faithful "Whiskers" as he set forth a second time, leaving his faithful companion tied on the shore in the care of an Eskimo boy whom he had bribed with gifts to be good to his faithful canine friend.

"When I have finished my course and pass over there," dramatically declared the speaker, "I expect to find the faithful old 'Whiskers' at the gate watching to see that his master squeezes through."

Dr. Wirt, in a scathing condemnation of war and those who are responsible for it, told graphically last night of the scenes to which he had been an eye-witness in the war-stricken countries of Europe; peace-loving citizens, transformed into stark-mad, raving demons and beasts, bent upon wholesale murder. He told of undying heroism in the trenches and of women who nobly replaced men in the working world.

Speaking of the enormous cost of the war in both life and property, and the inevitable result of it, the speaker said, "America after three years of war would be reduced to the level of Mexico. Let the jingoes howl and the militarists appeal to your patriotism, but before you back their program, let us count the costs to ourselves and our children. There is a stronger appeal for neutrality—that of humanity and our common heritage in a Christian civilization. War destroys civilization which it has taken a thousand years to build. It dethrones reasons and makes devils of good men."

Dr. Wirt discussing stories of atrocities committed by the belligerent nations, declared the one side is as culpable as the other; that no matter who started these atrocities, the hydrophobia of WAR had bitten them all.

The moral lesson, according to Dr. Wirt, to be derived from the awful carnage is "that a nation that surrenders its high moral character is lost, just as a man who, in an unguarded moment, flings away his character, is lost."

Providing for the valuation and assessment of lands containing deposits of lead and zinc.

Providing that elections in villages and fourth class cities on the purchase or construction of waterworks and lighting plants shall not be held oftener than once a year.

Requiring the dairy and food commissioner to collect statistics of the dairy industry in the state once in two years.

Appropriating $8,000 for the state tuberculosis camp in the forest reserve.

Appropriating $1,500 to the Wisconsin Academy of Science, Arts and Letters.

Amending the schedules in the workmen's compensation act.

Appropriating for compensating chaplains officiating in the legislature at the rate of $3 per day.

Changing the date for the annual school meeting from the first Monday in June to the first Monday in July, at 8 p. m. (Effective January 3, 1916).

Giving state aid of $1,000 per school for consolidated school districts.

Amending the law on certified public accountants.

Authorizing the superintendent of public property to sell surplus print paper.

WHAT TO DO FOR ITCHING SKINS

Eczema, ringworm and other itching, burning skin eruptions are so easily made worse by improper treatment that one has to be very careful. There is one method, however, that you need not hesitate to use, even on a baby's tender skin—that is, the resinol treatment. Resinol is the prescription of a Baltimore doctor, put up in the form of resinol ointment and resinol soap. This proved so remarkably successful that thousands of other physicians have been prescribing it constantly for 20 years. Resinol stops itching instantly, and almost always heals the eruption quickly and at little cost. Resinol ointment and resinol soap can be bought at any druggist's.

CLEARs BLOTCHY SKIN

Try resinol soap for a week. You will be surprised to see how it clears and freshens your complexion, even in that short time. Used for the shampoo, it removes dandruff and keeps the hair live, rich and lustrous. This is because it contains the soothing, healing resinol medication

Text of New German Note

warfare adopted by them in contravention of international law.

Fight For Existence

"With all its efforts in principle to protect neutral life and property from damage as much as possible, the German government recognized unreservedly in its memorandum of February 4, that the interests of neutrals might suffer from the submarine warfare. However, the American government will also understand and appreciate that in the fight for existence which has been forced upon Germany by its adversaries and announced by them, it is the sacred duty of the imperial government to do all within its power to protect and save the lives of German subjects. If the imperial government were derelict in these, its duties, it would be guilty before God and history of the violation of those principles of highest humanity which are the foundation of every national existence.

Violate International Law

"The case of the Lusitania shows with horrible clearness to what jeopardizing of human lives the manner of conducting war employed by our adversaries leads. In the most direct contradiction of international law, all distinctions between merchantmen and war vessels have been obliterated by the order to British merchantmen to arm themselves and to ram submarines, and the promise of rewards therefor, and neutrals who use merchantmen as travelers thereby have been exposed in an increasing degree to all the dangers of war.

To Permit Passengers' Escape

"If the commander of the German submarine which destroyed the Lusitania had caused the crew and passengers to take to the boats before a torpedo, this would have meant the sure destruction of his own vessel. After the experiences in sinking much smaller and less seaworthy vessels, it was to be expected that a mighty ship like the Lusitania would remain above water long enough even after the torpedoing to permit passengers to enter the ship's boats. Circumstances of a very peculiar kind, especially the presence on board of large quantities of highly explosive materials defeated this expectation.

"In addition, it may be pointed out that if the Lusitania had been spared, thousands of cases of munitions would have been sent to Germany's enemies and thereby thousands of German mothers and children robbed of breadwinners.

Would Protect Americans

"In the spirit of friendship where-with the German nation has been imbued towards the United States and its inhabitants since the earliest days of its existence, the imperial government will always be ready to do all it can during the present war also to prevent the jeopardizing of lives of American citizens. The imperial government, therefore, repeats the assurances that American ships will not be hindered in the prosecution of legitimate shipping and the lives of American citizens in neutral vessels shall not be placed in jeopardy.

In order to exclude any unforeseen dangers to American passenger steamers, made possible in view of the conduct of maritime war by Germany's adversaries, German submarines will be instructed to permit free and safe passage of such passenger steamers when made recognizable by special markings and notified a reasonable time in advance.

The imperial government, however, confidently hopes that the American government will assume to guarantee that these vessels have no contraband on board, details of arrangement for the unhampered passage of these vessels to be agreed upon by the naval authorities of both sides.

Propose Passenger Service

"In order to furnish adequate facilities for travel across the Atlantic for American citizens, the German government submits for consideration a proposal to increase the number of available steamers by installing in passenger service a reasonable number of neutral steamers under the American flag, the exact number to be agreed upon under the same condition as the above mentioned American steamers.

"The imperial government believes that it can assume that in this manner adequate facilities for travel across the Atlantic ocean can be afforded American citizens.

"There would, therefore, appear to be no compelling necessity for American citizens to travel to Europe in time of war on ships carrying an enemy flag. In particular, the imperial government is unable to admit that American citizens can protect an enemy ship through the mere fact of their presence on board.

Followed England's Example

"Germany merely followed England's example when she declared part of the high seas an area of war. Consequently, accidents suffered by neutrals on enemy ships in this area of war cannot well be judged differently from accidents to which neutrals are at all times exposed at the seat of war on land when they be take themselves into dangerous localities in spite of previous warnings.

"If, however, it should not be possible for the American government to acquire an adequate number of neutral passenger steamers, the imperial government is prepared to interpose no objections to the placing under the American flag by the American government of four enemy passenger steamers for passenger traffic between North America and England. Assurances of 'free and safe' passage for American passenger steamers would extend to apply under the identical pre-conditions to these formerly hostile passenger steamers.

Hope for Understanding

"The president of the United States has declared his readiness, in a way deserving of thanks, to communicate and suggest proposals to

E. O. Schultz asserting that no member of the council would ask an injunction to restrain the city from payment of the contractor, Alderman Smith, announcing himself as in favor of doing the work, put the direct question to Mahoney whether he would take action against payment should the work be done according to a city contract.

"I certainly will!" responded the alderman from the Nineteenth ward. "I'm opposed to spending any more money in Minnesota so long as we have a free bridge."

With this frank statement from Mahoney, several speakers argued that it was unfair to allow the contractor to take chances of not getting his money, and the resolution allowing his withdrawal was passed 12 to 8.

Offer to Pledge Salary

A feature of the debate was an offer by Alderman William Torrance, an earnest friend of the proposition to have the bridge filled in, to pledge a year's salary to pay the contractor's bill should an injunction be issued against the city. Alderman Kroner at once seconded the suggestion with a similar offer.

Alderman Torrance's resolution to post a sign on the bridge was brought up immediately following, and occasioned some debate, finally passing after the city engineer and

Objects to the Kegs

S. H. Fitzwater, saloon proprietor on South Front street, took up the cudgels against slipshod brothers-in-trade in a communication to the council in which here requested an ordinance prohibiting beer kegs on sidewalks in front of saloons. It gathers flies and looks untidy, Fitzwater's letter told the council. His communication was referred to the liquor license committee.

board of public works had declared the bridge extremely unsafe, especially for automobiles.

"Some of the piling is almost rotted away," Commissioner Vollmer told the council.

A possible solution of the difficulty appeared with the introduction of a resolution by Alderman Worth that the work be done by the city without intervention of a formal contract. The resolution was referred to a committee.

Mayor's Plans Held Up

The mayor's promised proposal of a plan whereby the city may buy its paving brick in the open market, which followed his sensational charge that a "brick trust" has been mulcting the city for street-blocks, did not materialize. After the meeting his Honor explained he had been too busy to draw up the communication and that the city attorney had been too busy to write the legal opinion upon which his suggestion was to have been based. He promised the communication for the August meeting of the council.

Refuse Chief Counsel Fees

An echo of the legal clash between Chief of Police John B. Weber and Mayor Ori J. Sorensen regarding authority in the department brought on a hot debate when a resolution was introduced to pay $150 counsel fees incurred by the chief. The resolution finally was killed, 9 to 8, with Aldermen Mahoney, Mashek and Roth excusing themselves from voting.

Contractors having in charge the construction of a concrete sheer fence for the Mississippi river bridge obtained a sixty day extension of time last night, representing that high water had made it impossible for

Here's the Constable Nimrod

"There's too many constables now," sighed Alderman Mahoney when the name of L. B. Omerberg was placed in nomination as a constable by Alderman Schultz. "Just the other day I saw one out hunting doves with a shotgun inside the city limits. He had a big star on, too."

them to begin the work which their contract called for complete by August 1.

For Splitting Eighth

The council, with the exception of Alderman Mashek of the Twenty-first ward, and one or two others, is in favor of the Schneeberger "gerrymander" ordinance transferring a strip of the Eighth ward to the Twenty-first. Alderman Schneeberger asked for a test vote to discover the sentiment before advertising the ordinance, in order to save expense, and there were but three or four dissenting voices.

The office of wood-measurer was repealed by amending an ordinance last night, and the duties of sealing the government of Great Britain with particular reference to the alteration of maritime war. The imperial government will always be glad to make use of the good offices of the president and hopes that his efforts in the present case, as well as in the direction of the lofty ideal of the freedom of the seas, will lead to an understanding.

"The undersigned requests the ambassador to bring the above to the knowledge of the American government and avail himself of the opportunity to renew to his excellency the assurance of his most distinguished consideration. (Signed) "VON JAGOW."

she "entertains the confident hope that the American government will see that these ships do not carry contraband, such ships to be provided with distinguishing marks and their arrival announced a reasonable time in advance."

This suggestion, officials declared, carries with it a surrender of neutral rights that the United States cannot consent to. It was pointed out that should this government attempt to guarantee that cargoes were non-contraband, it would be entering the war as Germany's ally, inasmuch as it would be serving notice that all Atlantic liners not protected by the American flag, or designated neutral flags, were fair prey for German submarines.

England Blamed for Submarines.

Germany declares that England's closing of the North sea, her proclamation of a starvation blockade, and her general disregard of the rules of international warfare are alone responsible for the submarine warfare. The note recognizes that this blockade imperils neutrals but in this connection the bold declaration is made that "Germany's sacred duty" is to protect her own people."

As for the Lusitania, critics of the communication remarked that there is no more evidence of a purpose to all firewood on the city market added to those of the city weighmaster. Sewers were ordered contracted for on Seventh street between Jackson and Johnson and Adams and Denton; State between Fifteenth and Sixteenth; Ross between Wall and St. Paul; Tenth from Winnebago to Jackson and Thirteenth from Denton to Park avenue.

Alderman Mahoney introduced an ordinance providing for a spur track of the Milwaukee road across Vine street near Front street, to reach a warehouse which the W. A. Roosevelt company contemplates building. The measure was referred to committee.

make reparation for the loss of Americans' lives than there was today the ship was sent to the bottom.

Although officialdom evidently did not think there would be a break as a result of the note's unsatisfactory character, it evidently did think the situation loaded with dynamite, in that the unwarned torpedoing of beligerent passenger ships with Americans on board might be resumed at any time.

Another Case Means Crisis

If, while refusing to accept the American position in principle, Germany refrains in practice from a resumption of such war methods, it was generally agreed matters probably will continue to drift on as at present. Another torpedoing, however, it was felt, would precipitate a crisis.

MOTOR PLUNGES FROM CAUSEWAY

One small bolt which dropped from the steering gear of John Dimon's automobile as he was driving south over the causeway between the north and south sides last night caused the machine to bolt over the side of the causeway and smash itself into a tree down the east embankment.

The car was damaged to considerable extent, but Dimon and his son escaped by jumping when the machine became uncontrollable. The accident took place about 7 o'clock last night two blocks north of the Standard Oil company building.

The machine was later hauled to the road and driven home under its own power.

John McGraw's cup of happiness is flooded today—his Giants licked the hated Reds twice the same day and moved up in the standing.

Grover Cleveland Alexander not only held the Pirates to two lonely hits, but drove in one run himself in a 2 to 1 victory.

The Red Sox lost a swell chance to remain on even terms with the White Sox. The Tigers mauled three Boston pitchers for fifteen hits and 15 runs.

The Tigers all but stole the Boston catcher's mask—pilfering seven bases, two of which went to the well-known Mr. Cobb.

It may be that the fans have buried Mr. Mack unduly. He seems able to slip a win over now and then, anyway. Joe Bush pitched shut out ball yesterday, holding the Browns to three hits.

The Dodgers pulled the Cubs down dangerously near the Phils, thanks to rotten pitching by Chicago's hurlers and heavy clouting by Jake Daubert, Buck Wheat, et al.

The Buffalo Feds garnered 29 hits and a pair of games from the slipping Brookfeds. Mr. Kauff, it appears, is sadly needed.

646% Increase Tells the Story of Nation-Wide Chandler DemandChandler History and Convincing Increases

Chandler Light-Weight Six, the first high-grade six-cylinder car weighing less than 3,000 lbs. and selling for less than $2000, introduced to the public during the Chicago Automobile Show, January, 1913.

Ground broken for Chandler factory, April 6th, 1913.

Delivery of Chandlers in quantities began July 30th, 1913. Selling price, $1785.

The year 1914 brought very general recognition to the Chandler Car. Leading dealers sought the Chandler sales-agency and sales leaped forward. Selling price, $1595.

The Chandler Light-Six idea was now thoroughly established.

Official tests by Chicago and New York Automobile Clubs proved Chandler economy beyond shadow of doubt.

Year 1915 opened with the announcement of the new Chandler price, $1295, a record-making low price for a high-grade six.

Such a car at such a price stampeded the trade toward the Chandler.

Two new factory buildings and a large addition to the main factory completed by March 1st to take care of added production.

Chandler production increased rapidly. By April 1st we were shipping 40 cars per day, by May 5th 50 cars per day, by May 20th 60 cars per day.

April shipments showed 233% increase over April, 1914.
May shipments showed 493% increase over May, 1914.
June shipments showed 646% increase over June, 1914.

DEDICATION

To the Public Safety Commission of Chicago and Cook County—

I know of no better use that can be made of this book than to dedicate it to the divine purpose of Education in matters that contribute to the prevention of those numerous causes of death which come under the official care of the Coroner of a great city like Chicago.

The figures on page 166 which shows a reduction of 464 such cases in Cook County in the single year of 1914, constitute a magnificent tribute to all the agencies that have aided in this truly great work.

To the members of the Public Safety Commission especially, I tender my appreciation and gratitude for the great service they have rendered in their whole hearted and self sacrificing efforts to promote these objects, and I have much pleasure in placing the copyright of this book in the hands of this Commission, believing that they will use it to the utmost advantage in the education and warning—not only to the people of Chicago, but of the whole country.

MOTHER INFLUENCE WILL ABOLISH WAR

Wounded Men Cry for Their Mothers on Battlefield Says Wife of British Labor Leader

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., July 10.—"A noted British military leader told me that it was not the sight of the dead, the terrible carnage, or the dreadful desolation of the war zone that sickened him and caused him to lie awake nights, but it was the cries of wounded men for their mothers."

This is what Mrs. Ethel Snowden, wife of Philip Snowden, labor leader member of parliament, said today. "It is this," Mrs. Snowden declared, "that is going to end the present war and all future wars. It is the mothers of the world who, when they are allowed to vote will not allow their sons, husbands and fathers to be slaughtered for what —to settle difficulties between nations, that could be settled by men of sufficient calibre without killing."

"We cannot stop the present war," declared Countess Alexandra Dumas of Paris, who is attending the exposition, "but we can make it the last."

The countess, whose husband has returned to the trenches in the French army after having been seriously wounded in action, is a member of the famous Dumas family of literary fame.

"I cannot speak on peace at this time," she told the peace advocates, "but to one whose husband and relatives and dearest friends are being wounded or killed in this thing called war, work for peace is the inevitable consequence."

THE ADVENTURES OF STANLEY BROOKE

THE DELIBERATE DETECTIVE

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

(Copyright, 1934, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

BROOKE was conscious of a variety of most disquieting sensations. In the first place, he had completely lost his appetite. Furthermore, he was furiously and unreasonably angry. Charles hung around him continually, aware that all was not well with his favorite patron.

"It is not one of monsieur's regular days for luncheon here," he ventured.

Brooke was scowling across the room toward the small table against the wall, at which Constance and a companion were seated.

"It isn't," he admitted. "That accounts for it."

"Accounts for it, monsieur? But for what?"

Charles glanced wondering across the room—and understood. The perplexity upon his face disappeared.

"Monsieur perceives that the young lady in whom he is interested has found a companion," he remarked confidentially. "They sit together today for the third time. On Tuesday evening he dined with mademoiselle."

Brooke muttered something between his teeth and poured himself out a glass of wine.

"The young lady would probably object to our discussing her," he remarked grimly. "You can fetch me my coffee. And this afternoon I will take a liqueur—the old brandy."

"Monsieur shall be served," Charles murmured, and hastened away. It was not until he had served the coffee and generously filled the liqueur glass above the line with the deep-brown brandy that he spoke again. He leaned forward confidentially.

"It is for monsieur's private ear, this," he whispered. "We do not, as a rule, speak of such things. The gentleman who is with her now—he wrote a little note to mademoiselle here in the restaurant at luncheon one day. Mademoiselle replied, and he took his coffee at her table."

Brooke waved the man away impatiently.

"That will do, Charles," he said. "There is probably some explanation. It certainly is not our business."

Brooke lit his cigarette, and while he smoked he looked across the room. The man was apparently a little less than middle-aged, dark, with small, black mustache, well groomed, well dressed. He would, without doubt, rank as good looking. His manner indicated an interest in his companion which to some extent, at any rate, seemed inclined to return.

Constance was certainly more animated than usual. The pallor of her cheeks was undisturbed, but her eyes were exceptionally bright, and she was listening with obvious interest to all that her companion had to say. Beyond the faint uplifting of her eyebrows and the grave nod with which she had acknowledged his greeting upon his entrance, she had taken no further notice of Brooke.

Presently he paid his bill and went. Constance, although without doubt she saw his preparations for departure, took not the slightest further notice of him. She was talking all the time, and her manner, for her, toward this new acquaintance, was positively friendly. Brooke jammed his hat upon his head and walked round to the club.

About 5 o'clock, just after he had sent his tea away for the second time, a page came in search of him.

"Wanted on the telephone, sir," he announced.

Brooke rose promptly.

"Any name?" he asked.

"There was no name, sir," the boy replied. "The gentleman is waiting on the line now."

Brooke hurried down stairs, passed into the telephone box, and took up the receiver.

"This is Brooke," he said. "Who are you?"

"I am Inspector Simmons," the voice answered. "I am speaking from Miss Robinson's room."

"Is Miss Robinson there?" Brooke asked.

"She is not here at present," the man replied. "I rang up to ask whether it would be quite convenient for you to drop round here."

"Of course I'll come," Brooke assented. "There's nothing wrong, is there?"

The voice hesitated a moment.

"Not that I know of. Perhaps it would be as well if you came round."

Brooke rang off, put on his hat and coat, caught a taxicab, and in a few minutes' time presented himself at Constance's room. To his surprise the inspector, who admitted him, was still alone there.

"Where is Miss Robinson?" Brooke demanded.

"That's exactly what I'm not sure about," the inspector explained. "I had an appointment with her here this afternoon at 3 o'clock. I arrived quite punctually, rang the bell, and as there was no answer, I went away. I came again half an hour ago, and as there was still no one here, I took the liberty of entering. Miss Robinson, as a rule, is very particular about her appointments."

"She was lunching with a friend today," Brooke remarked gloomily.

"Where? What sort of a friend?" the inspector asked.

Brooke hesitated. The inspector's tone was eager, almost impatient.

"It was a man I think she met at the Cafe Lugano, just a restaurant acquaintance."

"Was he dark, with a small, black mustache, brown, freckled complexion, well-dressed, looked like a military man?" the inspector asked quickly.

"That is an exact description of him," Brooke admitted. "Who is he? What do you know about him?"

The inspector glanced at the clock.

"What time did you say they were lunching?" he asked.

"Between half past one and two," Brooke replied. "I left them there."

"That confirms my information," the inspector said, half to himself. "It is now past 5 o'clock. You'll excuse me for a minute, if you please."

He went to the telephone and gave a few rapid orders. Then he turned round to Brooke.

"You've heard of the Glen Terrace tragedy, Mr. Brooke?" he asked.

"Of course! What about it?"

"The man whom you saw lunching with Miss Robinson is the man we are shadowing for it," the inspector declared. "We can't arrest him at the moment because there isn't sufficient evidence. All that we can do is to watch and see that he doesn't get away. I'm as confident that he did it as that I'm standing here at this moment, but I've tried to put our hands on him too quickly, and he once gets away, he is safe for life."

"Miss Robinson took the matter up entirely on her own account. She had an idea that she could get the evidence we are lacking. I told her it wasn't a proper case for her to mix herself up in. She only smiled at me. She is a determined young lady, as I dare say you know. Anyway, she has been meeting this man for the last few days, and she told me to be here at 3 o'clock. She expected, I believe, to have something definite to say. I don't mind confessing that I am a little worried about it."

"You say your men are shadowing him?" Brooke interrupted quickly. "Can't we find out exactly where he is?"

"They lost him after leaving the restaurant," the inspector replied. "It seems he went in by the hotel and must have come out by the restaurant entrance. We could have had our hand upon his shoulder any time during the last three months, and there isn't the least chance of his being able to escape out of the country. But where he is at this precise moment I must admit I don't know."

"Shall I go to the restaurant," Brooke asked, "and find out if any one remembers his leaving?"

"I have gone as far as that myself," the inspector remarked. "What I was told bears out what you say. Miss Robinson and Delamoir left the Cafe Lugano together in a taxicab at five minutes to two."

Brooke glanced at the clock.

"My God!" he muttered. "That was more than three hours ago!"

The sun was shining between the showers and the sky was unexpectedly blue when Constance and the man with whom she had been lunching left the little restaurant in Old Compton street.

They stood for a moment upon the pavement, and Constance, with a farewell nod, prepared to turn away.

"Good morning, Mr. Harold," she said. "We must have another talk some day about these fancies of yours."

"Why not this afternoon?" he asked. "Don't you see how beautiful it is just now? Couldn't you spare—say, one hour? Do you know what I was going to do? I was going to take a taxicab and drive about alone. Come with me."

She looked at him thoughtfully for a moment. Her hesitation made him the more insistent.

"Do come," he begged. "You know how nervous and broken down I am. To have any one as calm and self-centered as you are is like a sedative. Please come, just for one hour."

"I will come," she agreed.

He called a taxi and handed her in. They passed through St. James' Park, toward Buckingham Palace. Now that they had left the more crowded streets behind, he seemed a little more at his ease.

"Let me advise you seriously," she begged, "to go and see a nerve specialist. There is a man in Harley street—I could give you his address—to whom ever so many barristers go, and members of Parliament."

He laughed curiously.

"You think it is overwork only," he groaned. "I wish—oh, I only wish I dared tell you!"

She looked steadily ahead. There was so little about him that she did not know—one thing only.

"Why don't you?" she murmured. "You are so sensible," he muttered. "You would not go into hysterics."

"I am certainly not given to that sort of thing," she assured him.

"I promise you that under no circumstances will I attempt anything of the sort," she replied.

"My name is not Harold," he confessed, gripping the strap by his side and shaking as he spoke. "My name is Richard Harold Delamoir—Delamoir, you know!"

She turned her head.

"I seem to have heard the name lately," she murmured.

"Hear it!" he exclaimed. "Haven't you heard it at every street corner, seen it on every newspaper placard?"

"Of course," she assented. "You are the Richard Delamoir whose wife was found poisoned in your house at Putney."

He looked at her, his lips parted, his eyes blinking rapidly.

"You don't mind?" he cried. "You are not terrified?"

"Not in the least," she assured him calmly. "Why should I be?"

"There isn't a soul," he continued,

"except the doctor, whom I've dared to speak with about it. I haven't been near my club, I've had to leave my favorite restaurants alone—that's why I turned up at the Lugano, where I first saw you. I thought the doctor might have talked to me now and then. We used to be quite friendly once. I went to see him the other night—just dropped in to have a pipe, as I used to. He only said a few words, but it was the way he looked at me. I understood. I remembered his evidence at the inquest. Did you read about the inquest, Miss Robinson?"

"I did," she confessed. "It rather interested me."

"Ah!" he groaned. "They say that after the doctor's evidence it was a toss up whether I was arrested or not. Do you know why I wasn't? Do you know why I am free now? They are waiting to get a little more evidence. They are afraid they might try me and I might get off, and then they'd find out too late. Evidence! I could give them all the evidence they wanted."

"Then why don't you?" she asked.

being frightened always? You could have plenty of money, beautiful dresses. Dresses would make such a difference to you—dresses and hats. You are queer-looking, you know. You look old-fashioned and dowdy, and your face is so still and quiet that one forgets that you have really beautiful eyes. It would change you tremendously to be well-dressed."

Her eyes were half closed with silent laughter. There was something about the laugh a little cruel.

"You are afraid of me!"

"Who—??" she asked. "I afraid?"

"I didn't mean that!" he exclaimed. "I mean that you are afraid I should want to make love to you. Do you know, sometimes I think that I shall never want to make love to another woman."

"How old are you?"

"Thirty-nine," he replied. "I was twenty-six years old when I married Maggie. She hadn't her money then. She was just a chorus girl."

"Is it true that you used always to quarrel?"

"We used to quarrel a good deal," he admitted. "I am afraid I was impatient and a little jealous. Maggie was always having flirtations. She was crazy for admiration."

Constance sighed as she looked away. After all, there were all the commonplace elements of tragedy here.

"It is odd," he went on, half to himself, "how much I have told you, really; you—just a little stranger whom I spoke to in a restaurant. Why did you let me speak to you?"

"You looked lonely," she answered. "I am never afraid to speak to any one. I can take care of myself."

"Yes," he admitted, "I should say that that was true. You can very well take care of yourself. Would nothing terrify you, Miss Robinson? Would nothing shake your nerves?"

She smiled.

"I have no opportunity of judging. My life is a very uneventful one."

"Try them this afternoon," he begged eagerly. "You see where we are? We are close to Putney. The third turn to the left, then another turn, and the fourth house is where I live. Not a soul has crossed the threshold since that day. Come in with me. Sit with me for a little time. Perhaps it will help. Perhaps after that I shall not always gather round if they think I am here. They stare so. Come!"

He opened the door of a little drawing room, a queer apartment, half Oriental, with a tented divan in one corner and a curious smell of incense. The wallpaper was of bright yellow and the curtains black. There were withered flowers in the vases and cigarette ash upon the carpet. The atmosphere was almost unbearable.

"Do you mind opening a window?" Constance begged. "I couldn't possibly sit here like this."

He nodded and threw up one of the side windows.

"I have only just put my head in here since," he explained hoarsely. "I couldn't bear it. This is where we used to sit. Maggie had such queer taste. I don't think," he went on, "that she had really a healthy nature. She liked everything exotic and unnatural. Poor woman! You see the black curtains and the black carpet. She thought they went with the bright yellow walls and that they helped her complexion."

"She was older than I am, you know, and she used to fancy sometimes that she was losing her looks. Yes, I can breathe now there is some one in the room with me! Sit just where you are, please, Miss Robinson. She used to sit over in that corner, and often she would lie down on the divan there. I couldn't bear all the stuffy hangings, but she loved them. Now shall we talk about something? Shall I show you some views? There's an album there of my wife's notices. Or shall we talk about—Australia?"

She shook her head.

"You know very well, Mr. Delamoir," she said, "that, however hard you were to try, you couldn't talk about anything except—"

"Of course you are right," he interrupted. "It isn't my use. I can no more talk about anything else than I can think about anything else. If you want to see her picture, there it is on the corner of the mantelpiece. I can't look—I don't know why—I can't!"

He had turned his back upon her. Constance moved to the mantelpiece and took up the picture. It gave her at first almost a shock. It was the picture of a woman, haggard, painted, with darkened eyebrows, false hair, in a ball dress cut absurdly low, and a satin skirt absurdly tight. She remembered the words Inspector Simmons had used in speaking to her of the case: "A woman any man would be glad to be rid of!"

Her companion drew the curtain a little.

"If there were any way," he said, "of ending this—"

"Well, then, why not tell the truth and have it over?" she asked calmly.

He sprang from his seat. She sat quite still, unflinching. His passion, however, was not one of anger.

"If only I could!" he moaned. "If only—"

He stopped short.

"Stay where you are, Miss Robinson," he implored. "Stay just where you are. Don't move. I shall be back in a moment."

He left the room. She heard him climb the stairs and remained where she was, looking about her. It seemed to her that in all the adventures of her life she had never found herself in such an atmosphere.

She heard his footsteps descending the stairs. He entered the room. There was a new look in his face, white and strained. He carried in his hand a little volume, bound in violet purple and tied up with ribbon. He held it out to her.

"The evidence," he muttered—"I spoke of the evidence! Only a page or two, mind. You can read; then you will understand. You will be the only person in the world except myself who understands. Don't begin at the beginning—that's all rubbish. Begin there—there!"

His forefinger showed her the place. She began to read. The entries were sprawling all about the book in a loose, untidy handwriting, and without regard to keeping within the limits of the dates:

Began today worse than ever. I got up at twelve and passed the looking-glass on my way to the bath. I almost shrieked. I can't be like this! I had forgotten my hair! I dressed very quickly. Such beautiful things I put on. Then for a long time I could not make up my mind. I put on my lilac dress and my ermine, with a new hat that came last night, and a thick veil. I spent quite an hour with madame in her parlor. Then I walked slowly away down Bond street. At first no one looked at me at all. Then a man and a woman passed and I heard the man laugh!

I looked in at a shop window—perhaps my front was a little crooked. I went down to the theater. I thought today, perhaps, there might be a chance. Madame had taken a lot of pains. The stage-doorkeeper smiled when he told me that Eustace was out. "Liar!" But some came down the passage just a minute later. I told him what I wanted. He looked at me in a queer sort of way. "Can't see whom I'm talking to," he muttered. "Take off your veil." I took it off. Perhaps my fingers trembled, perhaps I took it off clumsily. He turned away. I could have sworn that he was laughing!

"My good woman," he said, "we want girls. . . . I got out somehow, crossed the road, I went into a shop. I had two glasses of port—filthy stuff, but they won't sell me drugs in quantities big enough. Never mind, when I got home I forgot!"

Constance put the book away from her. Her voice was not altogether steady.

"I don't want to read any more," she said.

"One more page," he insisted. "One more, please. You are beginning to understand. One human person in this world understands besides myself! I think that I shall go about with a lighter heart."

She turned the page.

Today I feel will be different. Laroche has sent me home the most wonderful white velvet gown. I have rested until 12 o'clock. Now I have just put it on. It fits me divinely. One would say that I had the figure of a girl. It is marvelous. I have put on my big black hat with the feathers and a thinner veil. Yes, I am going to risk a thinner veil!

I shall go to madame for an hour, and then I will take all my courage in my hands. I will go once more to Prince's. I know that Stephen will be there. I will stop him as he passes my table, and I will watch him. I shall see. He used to love me in white. Someday or other I feel younger myself today. As to being old, it is absurd. I am not old.

I have sent Susan for a taxi, and I have made Richard go away for the day. He bothers me so, wanting to go about with me. What admiration can a woman have who has a young husband with her? He doesn't seem to understand. I don't know why I feel so excited today. I think it is the white velvet gown. I shall put on my white silk stockings. It is a little daring, perhaps, but Stephen loves white. Now am I going. I don't think, after all, I shall ever need to use that little packet.

The writing sprawled down to the end of the page. Constance looked up. Delamoir's eyes were upon her.

"Turn over," he ordered.

She obeyed.

I can scarcely hold my pen. My God! I have seen the truth. It is the end! Madame called in little Emile to look at me before I left. "Madame," she declared, "is ravissante!" I paid her and went out. Just as I reached the door I fancied I saw a laugh. At the time I thought that it must be fancy. Now I am not so sure! I went to Prince's. I got my table just inside. I waited. Every one who passed seemed to be in such a hurry.

Bunsome came in, and Elliman, and Capt. Jenks, but they none of them appeared to see me. And then Stephen! He saw me, and he was alone, but he was going to pass. I held out my hand and I smiled at him.

"Stephen," I said, "won't you stop and speak to me?" He seemed quite awkward about it, but he stopped. I looked at the place by my side.

"Are you alone?" I asked very softly. He muttered something about having to join a party. I looked at him intently; he used to say that he liked me to look at him like that.

Why is it? He hesitated for a moment. Then he looked me straight in the face.

"Since you've asked me that question, Maggie," he said, "I'll tell you, as much for your husband's sake as your own. It's because you are. Leave off painting yourself and wearing clothes thirty years too young for you and we'd all be glad to see you now and then and talk to you. But no man likes to be seen talking to a girl. . . . I don't mean to be unkind," he went on, "for I suppose I was looking at him in a queer sort of way. . . . I've just told you this from myself and the others, for Richard's sake as well as your own. Now be a sensible woman and give it up!"

I think that he went away then. I am not quite sure what happened to me. I found myself in a taxicab, and here I am—here I am! Fortunately, I didn't have to buy anything. I've had the stuff with me for years. I am leaving this in case there should be any trouble. Whoever reads this, if it should be Richard, please tell him there's a letter for the coroner on the next page.

I don't know what it's going to be like on my next page, but it won't be worse than today. I'm going to—turn over!"

He took the book from her fingers. Constance suddenly felt cold.

"I loved her!" he muttered hoarsely. "Don't you understand that I shall have to hang before I could show that book?"

She gave him both her hands.

"Yes," she said, "I think I understand."

Constance walked into her rooms at a few minutes after six. Brooke and Inspector Simmons were on the point of leaving. She looked at them in some surprise.

"May I ask what you are doing in my apartments?" she inquired, beginning to take off her gloves.

"You forget that you had an appointment with me here at 3 o'clock," Simmons remarked.

"Quite right," Constance admitted. "I had forgotten it."

"And as we had information," Brooke continued, "that at five minutes to two this afternoon you left the Cafe Lugano with a certain notorious person called Delamoir, you may understand that we were becoming a little uneasy."

She sank into her easy chair. The two men looked at her. Every muscle in Brooke's body seemed to stiffen.

"Something has happened!" he exclaimed.

She drew a little brown-paper parcel from her pocket.

"Mr. Simmons," she said, "I started out this afternoon to try to trap a man into a confession of his guilt. I have instead succeeded in becoming acquainted with his innocence. The proofs are here."

Simmons moved swiftly forward, but Constance retained possession of the parcel.

"This," she went on quietly, "is his wife's diary. It is my belief that Delamoir would have gone to the gallows sooner than have given it up. I had talked to him for some time, and he has let me have it for two hours, on one condition."

"You are to read it, and the superintendent. Beyond that, no other person. Not a word of it is to be breathed to the press. Sooner than have had a single line appear in any newspaper, Delamoir would have hung."

"There is no doubt," she continued, "about it being his wife's diary. You will find inside some of her letters, in her own handwriting, and there is also one addressed to the coroner, which is in itself conclusive."

Simmons accepted the parcel and his charge.

"Queer," he remarked. "I know quite a lot of people who never believed in Delamoir's guilt; who even declared that he had an odd sort of affection for his wife, weird creature though she was."

Constance's eyes suddenly shone. For a single moment she was beautiful.

"There are many strange ways," she said, "in which a man may love a woman."

The inspector took his leave. Brooke turned to her earnestly, her last words sounding in his ears.

"But his task is," said he, "to make the woman believe and understand."

Constance felt her cheeks burn. Her eyes would no longer stand to their posts, arrogant sentinels, cool defenders against love's assaults. They turned, cowardly, in that moment, and took refuge behind their fringed curtains, while she answered, softly, very, very softly indeed:

"But I have known Stanley, dear boy, all along. I have known—and understood."

"And the other partnership that I have proposed before today," said he eagerly as a thirsty man, "the closer partnership, Constance?"

"I think," she answered slyly, "that we may have the papers drawn."

Chicago Grain Review

CHICAGO, July 10.—Wheat was sharply higher today until shortly before the close, when there was heavy selling at the advance. Inclination to get rid of holdings over the holiday augmented the sellers. The advance was caused by very firm Liverpool cables and more rain throughout the wheat belt. At the opening prices were up 1-2c, 1-4c and 1c above yesterday's close. They were 3-8c, 1-7-8c and 1-3-8c lower

"Whys" of Moves in European War

(BY J. W. T. MASON)
NEW YORK, July 10.—General Louis Botha, who fifteen years ago was the leader of the Boer war against Great Britain, has made his name today as one of the saviors of the British empire. This triumph of the democratic principle of government is the most notable lesson of the conquest of German Southwest Africa.

Germany's premier dependency, about which are centered the Teutonic plans for a great colonial empire, has surrendered to the Boer leaders who were so largely encouraged by Germany during the South African war. The grant of complete local self-government given South Africa by England has been completely vindicated. The British democracy will see in General Botha's success full justification of the governmental system for which Englishmen are fighting.

The practical effect of the Boer conquest will be to heighten the value of the imperial tie to Englishmen, and will lead to a larger voice in imperial questions being given to the colonies. The occupation of German Southwest Africa is not only the most important victory the allies have won but is also a very valuable hostage which Germany will want to ransom in the peace conference after the war. Here is the basis of a possible conflict of interests between England and the Boers. The Boer South Africans having won the German colony without help from the motherland, are anxious to keep it permanently. British South Africa has long vaguely aspired to expand at Germany's expense, and now the expansion is an accomplished fact.

But, if Germany cannot be forcibly driven from Belgium and France, one of the conditions of her voluntary retirement will be the restoration of her colonies, and particularly of Southwest Africa. The Boers, therefore, may be called upon to sacrifice the result of their long toil for the good of the empire at large. A sacrifice of this kind will only be made if compensation is granted in the form of future colonial participation in the control of imperial affairs. General Botha, therefore, may come to be known as the father of a new British imperialism.

BOY SHOTS OFFICER

Stone That Is Elastic.

There is a stone that is as flexible as rubber and that, when set up on edge in a thick plate, sways to and fro in the wind like a piece of leather. This stone is called Itakolumite, and the Scientific American says it is the mother rock of Brazilian diamonds.

BOUNTY GRAFT IS INVESTIGATED

GRANTSBURG, Wis., July 10.—Investigation of the alleged $20,000 "wolf bounty graft" got under way here when William White, arraigned at Balsam Lake on a charge of collecting fraudulent bounties in Polk county was immediately charged with a similar offense in Burnett county. He was bound over for trial July 15.

It is alleged that hundreds of pelts, bought in Canada for $5 and less, were secretly smuggled into Wisconsin, where a bounty of $10 was collected from the county and a similar amount from the state. White was known for several years as the "champion wolf killer of Wisconsin."

RUSSIANS LACKING PATRIOTISM SAYS WARSAW CANTOR

Polish Singer Here to Conduct Services for Sons of Abraham Discusses the War Situation

NOT FIGHTING FOR A FLAG

Cossacks Only True Russians in the Army of the Czar; Others Are Denied Citizenship

"Russia is losing in the present war for the reason that her soldiers are not fighting for their own flag and country and therefore are not interested in the outcome." This was the statement of Rev. Mendel Charkower, Jewish singer from Russia, who is in the city to conduct services at the synagogue of the congregation of Sons of Abraham, 411 North Eleventh street.

"Russia's army is composed of soldiers of many nationalities," explained Rev. Charkower, "to whom the ordinary rights and privileges of citizenship are denied. There are Poles, Jews, Roman Catholics, Protestants and Mohammedans, and not one of them feels that he is fighting for his own flag. Strictly speaking, the Cossack soldier is the only true Russian soldier in the Russian army."

"Wages, too, are extremely low, the soldiers receiving but $1.25 for three months' service in the army. Neither is there any protection or pensions for wives and families of soldiers, and in case a man is killed in battle his family is thrown upon its own resources and must shift for themselves."

Rev. Charkower conducted services at the Jewish synagogue at eight o'clock this morning and will also give a concert at half-past seven Sunday night. This concert is free and Jews and Gentiles alike are invited to attend.

Rev. Charkower was for a number of years cantor in one of the temples of Warsaw, Poland. He possesses a remarkably clear and flexible voice which ranges from a deep bass to a clear tenor.
